Based on the original workshop production for

The River Stage Playwright's Festival of New Work

Ceci n'est pas une histoire*: Just maybe, once upon a time, there is this farm run by an ex-milkmaid named Sheila. And this farm is like a sandbar in the river of life where the flotsam and jetsam of a deranged society wash up and there try to deal with any manner of inner demons. And there, led by Sheila, they explore a peculiar brand of yoga and other arts of enlightenment, untroubled by the world beyond the Ha Ha. And one day they wake up to find a family of ghouls has moved onto the adjacent land and are planning to develop a mixed-use, low-intensity industrial complex centered around a recycling plant powered by cow-belched methane. Well, of course, Sheila is incensed by this turn of events and is determined to put an end to the plan. However, this vengeful, spiteful family of ghouls, led by the sinister Pop Notter, will brook no opposition. Then, as these things go, there follows the usual crescendo of back and forth: persuasion, seduction, intimidation and threat until no action seems too extreme. And there you have it. Now sit back and enjoy!

"Storytelling has nothing, whatsoever, to do with logic. Logic is a limping stepchild of the true processes of the spirit. It's an illusion. It's a defective little parlor trick."

* Translation from the French: "This is not a story" (to paraphrase René Magritte).

 Ha Ha or ha-ha: a sunk fence; that is, a ditch with one sloping side and one vertical side into which is built a retaining wall; a ha-ha creates a barrier for sheep, cattle, and deer while allowing an unbroken view of the landscape. Thought to be first used in Great Britain by Charles Bridgeman who placed one in the landscape in the late 1690s at Levens Hall, Cumbria.
